LETTER

n this issue of The Journal, we focus on UWinnipeg alumni around the world, looking at their leadership, creativity, innovation, and action across a variety of disciplines and range of endeavors.

The Alumni Affairs team is always interested to hear about the ways in which our alumni were shaped by their time at the University. They often tell us that as students, they formed a relationship, shared an idea, or participated in a discussion that inspired them to research, explore, develop, and make decisions.

The University has much to offer alumni as well. Please visit UWinnipeg.ca and click on the upcoming events calendar to keep up with what's happening on campus, and plan to visit the University at least once this year – for a Virtuosi concert, a public lecture or panel discussion, a Wesmen game, a visit to Gallery 1Co3, a trip to the library, or Homecoming 2009. Contact the Alumni Affairs office for your alumni card, which doubles as a UWinnipeg library card and also entitles you to campus discounts.

In the interest of sustainability, we are working to build a stronger online presence for the Journal: look for it in April 2009. If you would prefer to receive The Journal online instead of on paper, please let us know. You can reach us at alumni@uwinnipeg.ca, at 204.988.7118, or toll-free at 1.888.829.7053.

or the past two years, it has been my pleasure to serve as the Director of Alumni Affairs. Our department's objective was clear, to engage our alumni with the University of today. At first glance this may have seemed like an onerous task, but after taking stock, we quickly recognized that we possessed the three greatest resources that any University can wish for: an alumni body that has a natural affinity to the institution; a dynamic and esteemed President providing leadership; and an Alumni Affairs "Team" made up of staff and the Alumni Association that is committed and dedicated to engagement.

Our continued support from the community, the corporate sector and our Alumni naturally encourages us to further explore new opportunities and partnerships. To this end, I am very pleased to assume the new role as Director of Strategic Initiatives Development. I will be looking to our alumni, our faculty and staff and leaders in the community to find collaborative and creative ways to lead the University in pursuit of its objectives, its continued drive for academic excellence and community development. I believe that when a community feels a sense of "ownership", an institution such as The University of Winnipeg can be a catalyst for social change. I look forward to continue working with all of you.

am honored to be President of The University of Winnipeg Alumni Association for 2008-09. This year the Alumni Council will create new avenues of outreach, opportunities for your involvement and connections with future alumni.

Outreach. Opportunity. Connection. All hallmarks of the "modern university" - UWinnipeg is no exception. Initiatives to reach into local and global communities present us with opportunities to learn with and from each other. For example, students in Winnipeg might sit beside students from Downtown, Africa or Asia, or, using distance technologies connect online to discuss international issues. Our university is growing beyond its walls and into the world! You have a role to play in this growth: through funding scholarships, supporting international students, and welcoming international alumni.

For example, I recently had the pleasure of meeting Timothy Lo (BA'83) who had travelled from his home in Hong Kong to update us on his progress in connecting with alumni in Asia. We look forward to further connections with him.

In this exciting year for alumni we need YOU – your ideas, your enthusiasm, your insights and your energies, to help us meet our objectives. I invite you to become involved with us. Visit http://www.uwinnipeg.ca/index/alumni-index to learn more.

LLOYD AXWORTHY PRESIDENT AND VICE-CHANCELLOR

President's

A ccording to Anais Nin: "Life shrinks and expands in proportion to one's courage." It takes courage to go beyond the ordinary and seek change from within, daring to investigate new ideas, nerve to go against the grain and navigate your own route. It takes courage to engage, improve and contribute to the world we live in.

The University of Winnipeg is an active and growing example of transformation and inclusion. Our downtown campus is home to students from many communities as close as Arlington Street and as far as Zimbabwe. Our classrooms are intercultural, transcending boundaries, creating a global consciousness on campus.

UWinnipeg continuously strives to remove barriers so that more students may access our resources. A concrete example is the Opportunity Fund, an initiative that is unique in Canada. Fast-track bursaries and tuition credits assist inner-city, Aboriginal and immigrant youth in getting an education and following their dreams. It helps bridge the graduation gap and transforms lives.

Our alumni community is as diversified as our classrooms and as our world. More than 40,000 UWinnipeg alumni are having an impact in their field of work and creating positive change in their communities. Some of those many accomplishments are outlined in this issue of The Journal.

During the spring and fall convocations, we honoured individuals who have taken active roles in human rights, sustainability and improving community through peace and education.

These recipients cross continents yet they share a vision to create a better world through politics, economics, theology, the arts, science and education. I want to share three intercontinental examples of people who earned an honorary doctorate of laws from The University of Winnipeg. Each is a visionary and an ideal example of what UWinnipeg represents. Each has the foresight, courage and valour to go beyond the ordinary and create the extraordinary. Their contributions have a ripple effect that transcends borders.

Honorary Doctorate of Laws recipient His Excellency Victor Yushchenko, President of Ukraine is an inspirational leader whose fearless defense of human rights transformed Ukraine from a country of tyranny to a democracy. He faced harassment and survived an assassination attempt. The threat to his life only strengthened his resolve to create change.

American citizen and entrepreneur Pat Broe invested in Canada's north. His unique vision and role in the development of Manitoba's north and investment in the Port of Churchill directly improves the northern economy and has a direct effect in improving trade across continents.

National Chief of the Assembly of First Nations Dr. Phil Fontaine is a survivor of the residential schools. His leadership helped secure many rights for First Nations People. He was integral in the settlement of claims arising out of the 150-year Indian residential school tragedy. His commitment and perseverance earned survivors of this tragedy a Final Settlement Agreement now being implemented, which is the largest and most comprehensive settlement in Canadian history. This settlement includes compensation as well as a Truth and Reconciliation Commission, an education fund, healing resources and commemoration funding.

These examples are just three snapshots of what is taking place on our campus. Everything UWinnipeg does reflects on our students and our alumni, and we are committed in keeping them proud of their institution. Our commitment to adapting to a changing world while remaining one of Canada's top universities as ranked by our students in the Maclean's and Globe & Mail surveys is a priority. Maintaining our excellent academic standing and ensuring equal access is available to all that seek a higher education is our compass as we continue to map a progressive and exciting University landscape that is inclusive – sustainable – on the cutting edge of education – and that is competitive in our shrinking and expanding world.

GLOBAL TO LOCAL: A Dream Come True

By Dr. Marilou McPhedran (LLD '92)

A few years ago I was walking through the dusty, noisy silk market in Karachi, Pakistan, while on assignment with the Asian Development Bank, when I remembered my freedoms growing up in rural Manitoba compared to the lack of fundamental freedoms of most women and girls in so many countries – due to the rise of fundamentalisms. As a mature professional woman, I had to be shrouded in order to go shopping – such a simple act, which hotel staff warned me against.

Recently, the hotel where I was based in Islamabad was blown to bits, demonstrating the challenges of working and living in our global village – far from one's roots. Writing this on a flight, when I stepped off the plane in Winnipeg, a big sign greeted me: "You of W.com – where you matter", capturing why I chose this university, decades ago. Tugging at my roots then, I registered at U of Winnipeg at seventeen. I loved cities, unlike the rest of my family, and what drew me to "You of W" as a teenager was the magnet that brought me back: a sense of belonging and purpose in a small university embedded in a complex, challenging cityscape.

Little did I guess when I returned last year for the UWinnipeg 40th Anniversary Homecoming, that in a few months I would be resigning as a law professor and Chief Commissioner of the Saskatchewan Human Rights Commission to return as the Principal of Global College.

A simple silver bracelet that I wear always is engraved "dream". I loved my Saskatchewan life but became captivated by the Global College dream. The Global College mandate of "research, dialogue, and action among the peoples of the world" and new interdisciplinary human rights degree – a first as far as I knew – intrigued and excited me. But, at Homecoming, when I walked into the newly named Carl Ridd Sanctuary to honour the professor who most influenced my life, I had no idea that I was returning to UWinnipeg.

Dr. Lloyd Axworthy and I had some major differences many years back, yet I developed a high regard for his principled, gender-responsive leadership in cabinet and how he pioneered "human security" – a concept now influencing the whole UN system. It's the measure of the man that my enthusiasm expressed at Homecoming led to the process of my becoming the Principal of Global College.

From a Canadian human rights practice, my past ten years involved international human rights in four universities, in places like Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Philippines, and Swaziland, which coalesced into teaching human rights as 'lived rights'; not just legal theory. To live our rights, we have to incur substantial systemic change – on the streets of Kandahar and Winnipeg. To live our rights, we need research, dialogue and action – now being facilitated in the new interdisciplinary human rights degree program and the seven institutes of Global College, which focus on: Health and Human Potential; Human Rights and Global Studies; Literacy and Transformative Learning; Political and Cultural Studies of the Americas; War Affected Children; Women's and Gender Studies; Religion and Global Policy.

Lifelong learners are welcome at Global College – in our degree programs and our Spring and Summer Institutes.

Community engagement at Global College surpasses anything I've seen at any other university in Canada. Members of the Lost Boys and Girls of Sudan, some child soldiers among them, have told me that the Global College's outreach and Dr. Axworthy's support have been transformative. To see the dream of integrating Community and University in the process of realisation confirms my decision, made in response to the moment when Lloyd Axworthy said to me quietly, but firmly,

"It's time to come home."

THE HUMPTY DUMPTY DILEMMA

By Dean Peachy

Humpty Dumpty sat on a wall
Humpty Dumpty had a great fall
All the King's horses
And all the King's men
Could not put Humpty Dumpty together again

Working this year in northern Uganda, the nursery rhyme from my childhood posed an apt metaphor for the challenges facing people I was interviewing: how do you put society together again after two decades of civil war have splattered everything?

As with many civil wars, the one between the Government of Uganda and the rebel Lord's Resistance Army (LRA) has been waged up close and personal, including combatants killing, torturing, and kidnapping people from their own communities. Upwards of 30,000 individuals have been abducted to serve as fighters or porters for the LRA, many of them children. Uncounted thousands of people have died, and many more were tortured or maimed. Ninety percent of the rural population was displaced with their homes destroyed, and many forced to spend years in crowded, squalid encampments for internally-displaced persons. The economy is in shambles. Everyone in the region is war-affected.

I was drawn to research in northern Uganda because of the persistent way in which local leaders have called for "reconciliation" in the midst of the violence. As one woman told me, "Something drastically happened in my life that turned me to looking for reconciliation, thirsting for reconciliation, seeing the need for reconciliation." The woman is Angelina Atyam, and the event she was referring to was the abduction of her 14-year-old daughter to become the forced "wife" of an LRA commander in the bush.

How does the mother of an abducted child become a leading proponent for reconciliation with the people perpetrating atrocities? Is justice possible in such a situation, and if so, what does it mean? Is reconciliation at individual, community, or national levels possible, and if so, what does it look like?

These questions are set in the midst of a raging controversy as to whether war-time atrocities should be addressed through western-style prosecutions by the International Criminal Court or by African approaches that draw on traditional cultural values of restoration and reconciliation, and build on recent transitional justice experiments such as South Africa's Truth and Reconciliation Commission and Rwanda's gacaca community courts.

I am not trying to answer this debate with my research, but rather to document and understand people's experiences as they seek reconciliation in their lives and communities. Along with my research associates, I have interviewed youth who were abducted, rebel commanders, community leaders, and government officials. I have attended ceremonies where goats and sheep were sacrificed, and interfaith religious ceremonies with peacebuilders from around the globe. I have been served tea by hands that were figuratively dripping in blood.

A common thread in the interviews is people who desperately want to be able to live in peace. Another striking commonality is a growing openness to putting aside notions that have been formed of the enemy, and a willingness to reach out to adversaries – even though the task is almost as difficult as putting an egg together again.

Dean E. Peachey is Professor of Conflict Resolution Studies at Menno Simons College. He is currently on sabbatical research leave, and working on a book tentatively titled Thirsting for Reconciliation: Case Studies of Transitional Justice in Northern Uganda.

udiences across the province have been seeing a lot more of The University of Winnipeg's Fine Art Collection lately. From February 7 - March 22, 2008, Gallery 1C03 on campus hosted (Re) Visiting the Collection: Selections of Manitoba Art from The University of Winnipeg in honour of the University's fortieth anniversary. The exhibition featured forty artworks created over the last century by 25 of Manitoba's best-known artists, including Jackson Beardy, Wanda Koop, Walter J. Phillips, Tony Tascona and others. Accompanied by an illustrated publication with essays by current and former University art curators Jennifer Gibson, Dr. Sarah McKinnon and Patricia E. Bovey, thirty pieces from this show subsequently embarked upon a year-long tour to several venues throughout Manitoba and in Saskatchewan, thanks to a partnership with the Manitoba Arts Network. Last spring the art traveled to Virden and Shaunavon, Saskatchewan before it was displayed at Thompson's Heritage North Museum for the summer. The works were then presented in Leaf Rapids and are currently being shown at the Sam Waller Museum in The Pas before they move on to Portage la Prairie, Holland and Carmen. Visiting the Collection, as the touring exhibition is titled, promotes knowledge about the University in these rural communities and enables us to share some of the gems in our art collection with those who do not often get to see such high quality pieces.

Other works from the University's art collection have been on view recently at The Winnipeg Art Gallery in three separate solo exhibitions highlighting prominent Manitoba artists. The WAG's Curator of Contemporary Art and Photography Mary Reid included two large paintings created by the late Caroline Dukes for the retrospective Caroline Dukes: Concealed Memories, displayed July 24 – October 19, 2008. The survey exhibition Head Space: Five Decades of Bruce Head ran from September 11 - November 23, 2008 at the WAG and contained eight of Head's abstract paintings and prints drawn from the University's art holdings. At present, five Sheila Spence photographic portraits from the University's collection can be seen at the WAG until March 29, 2009 in Sheila Spence: Pictures of Me.

Although the University's holdings of Aboriginal art are not large, we do own several pieces by important First Nations artists. Recognizing this, independent curator and University of Winnipeg alumna Jenny Western (BA Honours '03) selected four silkscreen prints from our collection by renowned Ojibway artist Daphne Odjig for the exhibition Mother's Mother's Mother: The Legacy and Rebellion of Aboriginal Women's Art. First presented in Winnipeg at Urban Shaman and Ace Art from July 11 - August 16, the group show toured to Brandon's Art Gallery of Southwestern Manitoba where it was displayed in September and October.

Winnipeg Art Gallery Director

STEPHEN BORYS on Coming Home

By Helen Cholakis (BA '93)

Stephen D. Borys was installed as the Director and CEO of The Winnipeg Art Gallery in June 2008. He oversees all aspects of the WAG, managing an operating budget of 5.5 million dollars and a staff of 60. Originally from Winnipeg, he moved back to the city from Sarasota, Florida, where he was the Ulla R. Searing Curator of Collections at The John and Mable Ringling Museum of Art and an adjunct professor in the art history department at Florida State University. He lives in downtown Winnipeg with his wife Hazel, a town planner and new urbanist, and their son Roman. Since his return, Borys says he has been enjoying walking to work, getting to know the people in the neighbourhood, and visiting local parks, restaurants, and museums.

Borys began his post-secondary education at The University of Winnipeg, and says he's glad he kept his first year of studies diverse.

"In my first semester at U of W, I took a course with Professor David Topper, Arts and Ideas," says Borys. "I wasn't contemplating art history as a major—as a minor—at all. In fact I was thinking about law school. I took that course and it changed my whole perspective on the role of art in society, and it changed my career path. I recall a lecture at the WAG when I was an undergraduate. The guest speaker was John Canaday, the distinguished American art historian and critic, and I had just finished Dr. Topper's course in which we had used one of Canaday's books. At the close of the lecture, Mr. Canaday remarked: 'The next time you hear someone use the expression—I don't know much about art, but I know what I like—tell them that you really can only like what you know or have been exposed to'... I've never forgotten Canaday's advice."

Borys graduated in 1984 with a BA Honours in Art History and went on to graduate school, receiving an MA in Art History from the University of Toronto in 1987 and a Ph.D. in Art and Architectural History from McGill University in 1994. He is currently enrolled in the Executive MBA program at the University of South Florida, Tampa.

Borys speaks with enthusiasm about his plans for The Winnipeg Art Gallery and says it's a great time to be the director, pointing out that The WAG is the sixth-largest art museum in the country, the oldest civic art museum in Canada, and will celebrate its 100th anniversary in 2012.

"My goal for exhibitions and programs is to bring more diversity and quality to the process, and this includes diversity in how we produce exhibitions: we need shows that originate here, shows where we partner with other museums, and packaged shows that we bring into the Gallery from other places. I also am interested in working more with our permanent collection, which totals over 24,000 objects; not just getting it out, but examining it seriously as we would do with any temporary exhibition."

Borys says that his time in the United States provided him with valuable opportunities and experience in the cultural sector, and it also opened his eyes to Canada's important role as a leader and innovator in the arts.

"As I worked nationally and internationally with colleagues at other museums and universities on various exhibition and research projects, I began to see how Canada was perceived around the world, and this was incredibly encouraging and exciting."

Borys explains the mission of The Winnipeg Art Gallery is to engage people with art, and he is looking at audiences in all places — locally, nationally and internationally — to achieve this goal. He believes that art is something that everyone should be able to embrace and enjoy.

"In terms of going cross-generational, cross-cultural, cross-media, I like a balance in what we document and present so that the Gallery visitor is exposed to a full spectrum of artmaking."

Getting people in touch with art and contributing to the cultural life of Winnipeg is a job Borys clearly enjoys.

"You know," he says, "I'm the director of one of Canada's great art museums located in the city where I was born; and the thought of walking to work and doing exactly what I have been trained to do, and what I want to do, is very rewarding."

STUDENT RECRUITMENT AND INSTITUTIONAL RELATIONS Creating a Global Community By Karyn Kibsey (BAH'06)

The University of Winnipeg operates with a global focus: recognizing diverse perspectives, encouraging a social conscience, and striving toward global citizenship. The Student Recruitment and Institutional Relations Office at The University of Winnipeg is a catalyst for diversity both on and off campus.

Student Recruitment and Institutional Relations, a newly constituted department at The University of Winnipeg, is headed by the Deputy Provost and Associate Vice-President International, Neil Besner, and supported by Director Livia Castellanos. Besner presents a progressive vision for the University and its international endeavors.

"Drawing on the strengths of our Global College, our new graduate programs, and on the unique advantages provided by our Collegiate and our strong English Language Program, the University is establishing a strong presence in international education," explains Besner. "Over the next five years, we are seeking to increase the numbers of our international student body from its current 500 students to 1000; we are also developing our study abroad program, enhancing our range of services for international students, increasing the number of residence opportunities near campus, and, of course, increasing the range and the number of scholarships and bursaries available for international students."

To support this vision, recruitment staff will be traveling the world, bringing the University's message to all corners of the globe. From South America to Asia and Europe to the Middle East, recruiters will be working at secondary schools, universities, language schools, and fairs to build relationships that will not only increase the international presence on campus, but also provide our Canadian students with opportunities to gain experience abroad.

Since her arrival as Director of Student Recruitment and Institutional Relations, Castellanos has been a driving force in many new projects.

"I am happy about several partnerships that The University of Winnipeg has established during the time I have been here: Beijing Concord College of Sino Canada is a new partner in China that will send undergraduate students to The University of Winnipeg, and Universidad de León in Mexico is another strong partner that just sent 33 students to take courses in English and culture at The University of Winnipeg English Language Program," notes Castellanos.

The latter is a reciprocal exchange program; 33 students from the Universidad de León studied at The University of Winnipeg from August 15 to September 13, while students from UWinnipeg's Modern Languages department will travel on exchange to the Universidad de León in May 2009 for a five-week program.

A separate group of students arrived in August 2008, from Xiamen, Fujian Province, China. These 22 students from Xiamen will complete an intensive English Language Program which involves daytime classes in English and participation in University-run cultural activities on select afternoons and evenings.

When dialogue between Xiamen and The English Language Program at The University of Winnipeg began, work commenced on building a program to meet the needs of these students. While their studies began in The English Language Program, they are expected to leave with a full university education. These students plan to continue their studies at The University of Winnipeg, enrolling in regular classes as international students.

Many of the international students who study at The University of Winnipeg adjust to Canadian life with the help of Homestay families. Homestay is a unique living arrangement through which international students live with a host family. Living with a Canadian family through the Homestay program provides students with a socio-cultural learning opportunity which complements their studies. Host families regularly comment on the satisfaction they get from meeting students, experiencing a variety of cultures, and helping the University find homes for its students.

From across the world to our own backyards, The University of Winnipeg is invested in creating a global community. We would like to invite all our Alumni to take part in our dynamic initiatives.

The University of Winnipeg is currently looking for Alumni Homestay families. If you or someone you know is interested in becoming a Homestay family, please contact Ingrid Willey at i.willey@uwinnipeg.ca or phone 204.982.1702 for more information.

If you are an educator, counsellor or administrator at an overseas school or an international school in Canada and would like more information about The Student Recruitment and Institutional Relations Office, please contact Livia Castellanos at l.castellanos@uwinnipeg.ca or call 204.258.2952.

UWINNIPEG CAMPUS UPDATE

RICHARDSON COLLEGE FOR THE ENVIRONMENT AND SCIENCE COMPLEX

Construction on the Richardson College for the Environment and Science Complex began on November 17, 2008. It will be located on the University's new Furby/Langside western campus and will contain state-of-the-art, energy-efficient teaching and research laboratories for biology, chemistry and environmental studies, as well as office and classroom space. The LEED-certified facility will also be a policy centre for environmental issues and a centre for applied research in environmental technologies.

Construction on the College and Complex and the development of the green corridor connecting the site to the main campus have been made possible by the Richardson Firm, Family and Foundation's donation of $3.5 million, and by the Province of Manitoba's historic donation of $25 million and additional gift to support University laboratories. These major gifts have leveraged significant additional gifts from private donors for the project. Construction is scheduled to be completed in late 2010.

MCFEETORS HALL: GREAT-WEST LIFE STUDENT RESIDENCE

Construction on McFeetors Hall: Great-West Life Student Residence began on July 30th, 2008. Built on the northeast side of the Furby/Langside western campus, McFeetors Hall will provide a home for 176 students and 25 student families. This LEED-certified building will model a range of leading-edge environmental technologies to foster sustainability and energy efficiency. On November 7, 2008, Manshield Construction hosted a "Top On" ceremony to celebrate the installation of the hollow core roof. Special guest in attendance was UWinnipeg alumnus Ray McFeetors, CEO of Great-West Life, who donated $1.67 million dollars toward the Residence. Great-West Lifeco Inc. committed a further $1 million. Construction is scheduled to be completed in August 2009, and is currently proceeding ahead of schedule.

UWINNIPEG'S NEW TRANSIT TERMINAL NOW OPEN

The University of Winnipeg has opened a new bus-only loop road and bus shelter on campus between Spence Street and Young Street, transforming Spence Street between the CBC building and The Duckworth Centre into a pedestrian-only zone. The project is the result of cooperative discussions with area residents, CBC Manitoba, and the City of Winnipeg, and was made possible by a contribution of $1.2 million from the Manitoba government.

UWINNIPEG'S EASTERN CAMPUS TAKES SHAPE

On November 17th, 2008 The University of Winnipeg's Board of Regents approved the first phase of redevelopment of the Greyhound Bus Depot at 491 Portage Avenue and construction of a new building on the former United Army Surplus site at 460 Portage Avenue. These campus developments will allow for the consolidation of student services and academic programs into a cohesive campus environment, and will advance the University's goals of partnering with complementary external organizations and helping strengthen Winnipeg's downtown business and arts hub.

NEW MASTER'S PROGRAMS

MASTER OF ARTS IN BIOSCIENCE TECHNOLOGY AND PUBLIC POLICY

he Master of Science degree in BioScience, Technology and Public Policy is a two-year full-time program. Students complete course work that includes three elements: core BioScience, Technology, and Policy. In addition, students are expected to undertake a research project culminating in a Master of Science thesis. The current enrollment is 11 students: 9 full-time and 2 part-time. Four students in the program are externally funded by either the Natural Sciences and Engineering Council of Canada, the Manitoba Graduate Scholarship program or a foreign source of funding (international). The research program of the students is evenly distributed between ecological and molecular/biotechnology topics. Our educational objectives are four-fold. First, we provide our students with an applied education in the methods of science. Second, we educate our students in the methods of scientific literacy. Third, we educate our students on the relationship between science and the community around us.

This involves the study of science and ethics, and science and the developmen of public policy. Fourth, we educate our students in the methods of communicating science to policy-makers and the general public. We are training students not only in the basic methods of science, but how in to make a difference in society. We plan to launch a course-stream Masters degree in the fall of 2009 that will train students in biotechnologies. The new science building will provide our students with state-of-the-art research facilities.

MASTER OF ARTS IN ABORIGINAL GOVERNANCE

n the fall of 2008 the Aboriginal Governance Program is introducing its first five enrollees in its new Master's degree program. Carla Cochrane and Freeman Simard lead the local contingent in this historic first class, while Alex Paterson hails from Ontario. Tamara Stout is a Canadian coming back to study from her new home in Colombia, while Derek Nepinak, a law graduate from Saskatchewan and Alberta, returns to the roots of the Nepinak family in Manitoba.

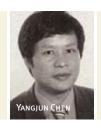

The program, which had offered an undergraduate degree program, has taken on new challenges as it becomes Canada's only program offering both the undergraduate and graduate degree in the new and challenging field of indigenous governance. The new course is being crafted as part of an overall university vision that unites the university with the community that it serves. With indigenous Elders as part of the faculty and with community work placement arrangements as one of the three optional study streams open to students, the AGP aims to promote and to provide leadership.

The AGP has also been invigorated in 2008 with the appointment of three new faculty members. Lorena Fontaine is a legal scholar from a well-known Manitoba Cree family. Brock Pitawanakwat is Anishinaabe from Ontario and First Nations University in Saskatchewan. Paul Chartrand is the third new faculty member and also the new director of the program. A law professor who grew up in the Métis community of St. Laurent, Manitoba, he graduated from The University of Winnipeg in 1972 and has held academic appointments in several countries.

GRADUATE PROGRAM IN APPLIED COMPUTER SCIENCE AND SOCIETY

The new M.Sc. degree in Applied Computer Science and Society is on technology and ethical/human/social aspects of computing. The program expands the role of the ACS department in developing applied computer scientists who can relate their technical skills to global and cultural issues and become valuable global knowledge citizens.

This fall term we admitted our first batch of graduate students. Ms. Leone Dodero is one of them. She has been awarded the Manitoba Graduate Scholarship to pursue her Master's degree. She will be doing research on the evaluation of graph reachability queries under the supervision of Professor Yangjun Chen. She hopes that her research results can be used to solve some hard problems in geographical navigation, ontology queries, as well as XML document processing.

In our program, some other interesting research topics are also provided, such as Intelligent System, Pattern Recognition, Information Security, and Distributed Computation. While many students are eager to be involved in a research team, some others may choose to study for course-based degree. A wide range of courses are scheduled including computer science theory and practice, as well as some ethical/human/social courses.

With the strong support of the Manitoba government, we are establishing an attractive and competitive program. We cordially welcome all those students who want to become successful engineers, researchers and scholars to join our program.

MASTER OF ARTS IN ENGLISH WITH A FOCUS IN CULTURAL STUDIES

on't be put off by the title of the new MA in English with a Focus in Cultural Studies degree: the somewhat wordy description names an exciting venture for the Department of English and The University of Winnipeg. Cultural Studies is one of the interdisciplinary sites at which teaching and research in the Social Sciences and Humanities is being rethought and reconfigured. The title of the new degree marks both the location of the new program within the well-established discipline of English studies and the commitment of the department to reach beyond its current borders to bring in students, researchers, and teachers from other departments and programs.

The questions posed in Cultural Studies often occur at the intersection of traditional disciplines. What, for example, are the implications of globalization for national and local cultures and identities? How do different forms of popular culture produce different publics? Why does the idea of "the child" and childhood shift in different social and cultural circumstances? How does the circulation in culture of such terms as "homosexual" and "heterosexual," or "masculine" or "feminine," help us to organize our understanding of ourselves?

The new MA degree offers students the opportunity to focus on five topics: cultural theory; cultures of childhood; genders, sexualities, and cultures; local, national, and global cultures; and manuscript, print, and digital cultures. As a program situated in an English department, Cultural Studies at The University of Winnipeg is particularly interested in how texts encode, produce, and resist cultural formations. Texts, however, now are understood to include not only poetry, novels, plays, and essays, but also films and social networking Internet sites, material objects such as toys, and public monuments, to list just a few of the possibilities.

The focus in the area of Cultures of Childhood will be enhanced by the presence of the Centre for Research in Young People's Texts and Cultures (CRYTC) at the University of Winnipeg. Established in 2006, after the appointment of Mavis Reimer to the position of Canada Research Chair in the Culture of Childhood, CRYTC facilitates the development and management of collaborative national and international research projects, hosts visiting speakers and researchers, maintains links with other research centres in children's studies internationally, and houses the offices of a bilingual journal in the field of the study of young people's texts.

HOMECOMING 2010

Bringing Manitobans Home

By Helen Cholakis (BA '93)

Anitoba Homecoming 2010 is a year-long celebration and series of events that will take place in Winnipeg and around the province throughout the year 2010, Manitoba's 140th birthday year. Its goal is to bring back former Manitobans and increase visitation to the province through a series of special events. Some of the celebrations involve partnerships with existing events like the Winnipeg Folk Festival, Dauphin Countryfest, Festival du Voyageur and Folklorama. Manitoba Homecoming 2010 also plans to attract national events that traditionally move around the country. Another component will be creating new and unique events like a New Year's Eve kickoff, socials and outdoor winter parties. There will also be a speaker series, job fair and trade conference, designed to create legacies after the year is over.

On the interactive website, www.manitobahomecoming2010.com visitors can create a profile, sign up for newsletters and chat about their favourite places and things to do in Manitoba. The founding partners of Manitoba Homecoming 2010 are Travel Manitoba, Destination Winnipeg and the Province of Manitoba.

Stuart Duncan (BAH Geography '84) is the president of Destination Winnipeg Inc. (www.destinationwinnipeg.ca), Winnipeg's economic development services agency.

"Destination Winnipeg is the city's marketing arm and we're involved in economic development projects and expansion opportunities for the good of our city," says Duncan, "We're in the business of tourism, so we work around the year to attract meetings, conventions, sports and special events, and group business to the city."

Duncan remembers The University of Winnipeg as "a great university to do undergrad work." He says he enjoyed having "top-notch professors" like Tony Kuz, James Richtik, and John Selwood in Geography and Professors Snidal and McKinley in Economics, small classes with interactive discussion, and great courses in statistics, geography, economics and city planning.

"Which is relevant," he explains, to his work with Destination Winnipeg involving economic development, regional planning and marketing. "I have kept a keen interest in geography, economics, trade, corporate finance and multi-disciplinary studies. I'm interested in world affairs and like looking at things holistically."

Duncan also says he feels fortunate that he was able to do well enough in his final year at The University of Winnipeg to be awarded a full scholarship and teaching assistantship at York University, where he went on to receive a Master's degree ('87), again combining geography and economics. After graduation, and prior to returning home to join Destination Winnipeg, Duncan worked in a variety of roles and organizations, including for the Province of Manitoba as the CEO of the Economic Innovation and Technology Council, in Calgary for KPMG LLP as vice-president in their corporate finance practice, also in Calgary as General Manager of the Canada West Foundation, and owner/partner of an economic and trade research firm in Winnipeg.

Kevin Walters (BA Administrative

Studies '80) is the executive director of Manitoba Homecoming 2010. His job over the next two years is to plan Homecoming 2010 events, develop partnerships with various events and organizations and market the year to ex-pat Manitobans to encourage them to come home and celebrate the best of Manitoba.

He has had a lot of experience with world-class events in Winnipeg. He was Chair of the 2005 Winnipeg Juno committee and Co-Chair of the Canadian Country Music Week last September. He says when people ask how long he has been in the music business, he tells them, "Since about grade nine! I booked the bands at my high school, I booked the bands in University and at U of W I worked with the programming department on all the events and socials that went on." On the academic side, he remembers being in a class of about 12 with David Walker, where they would sit around a table talking and had a satirist from Air Farce as a guest speaker; taking sociology classes with Prof. Morrison; and the hardest class he ever took, a political science course with Claudia Wright. He liked the style of learning at The University:

"It was a free exchange of ideas, as much as textbook learning... You learned how to think. There was obviously a knowledge component, but you also learned how to use that knowledge in a small group setting."

THE UNIVERSITY OF WINNIPEG FOUNDATION UPDATE

PROFESSOR A.R.M. LOWER

Celebrated Canadian Historian

By Nadine Kampen, BA '81, based on recollections by Jeanette (Grosney) Block, UColl '43, BA '46 and Jack Russell, BA '46

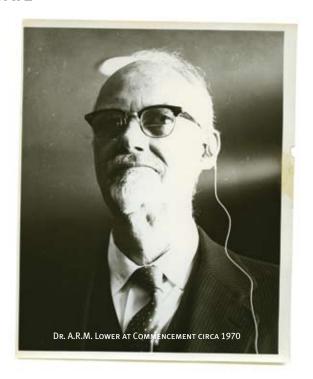

In December 2008, UWinnipeg established its new National Centre of Canadian History, welcoming Canada's National History Society - publishers of the Beaver historical magazine - and Oral History Centre to new offices in Bryce Hall. This initiative is supported by the H. Sanford Riley Fellowships in Canadian History, awarded for the first time in Fall 2008, encouraging dialogue among and with the country's top historians. How fitting it is to recollect the University's tradition as a leading centre of excellence in Canadian History and to remember one of Canada's foremost historians and Wesley College and United College Professor and History Department Head, A.R.M. Lower...

Inited College '46 graduates Jeanette Block and Jack Russell proudly recall studying under Professor Arthur Reginald Marsden Lower, PhD, CC - one of Canada's great historians. A graduate of Toronto and Harvard universities, Dr. Lower came to Winnipeg in 1929, where he headed the History Department for Wesley and United Colleges for 18 years.

"In May 1946, our graduates went out into the world – a world recently emerged from a terrible war – with high hopes and high ambition," says Russell. "It was a society on the threshold of change – a Canada full of promise and opportunity and growing strength, ready to take its place among the nations of the world. And those of us who studied under Professor Lower went out with a fuller understanding of that world."

"Dr. Lower was a giant of a man in so many ways," says Block, who corresponded with Professor Lower up to the year of his death. "He was tall, imposing, sometimes gruff, and impatient. He was also an inspiring teacher, sensitive, witty, kind, and strangely surprised when students remembered him long after he left United College."

"Lower was an exciting figure," says Russell, "a man of great personal presence and distinction – one who dominated the classroom with his obvious learning and ability to interest and inspire with thoughts and ideas."

Whether through the History Club that Lower organized, or through his lectures, books, articles, and discussions, students keenly valued his teachings. In fact, the Class of '46 elected him as its Honorary President.

In one of his letters to Block, Lower notes, "United College in those days was a stirring place, always on the edge financially... with so many energetic, enterprising and gifted students that it was well worth while. It was the students, in fact, who made the College."

And in 1985, he writes, "One of my present students has visited The University of Winnipeg and brings back the same report about its atmosphere that would have been applicable in your day and mine. I used to call it the poorest college in Canada (economically), but otherwise I am beginning to think it must have been one of the richest."

"ARTHUR LOWER WAS ONE OF OUR FOREMOST HISTORIANS, A GREAT CANADIAN, AND A GREAT TEACHER. IT WAS A PRIVILEGE TO HAVE KNOWN HIM AND TO HAVE BEEN ONE OF HIS STUDENTS."

Jack Russell, United College '46

Lower served as president of the Canadian Historical Association in 1943, and wrote several books, including one of our country's classic history texts, Colony to Nation (1946), along with Canadian in the Making (1958), and his autobiography, My First Seventy-Five Years (1967).

In 1947, Lower left United College to become Douglas Professor of History at Queen's University in Kingston until retirement in 1959. He was named a Fellow of United College in 1956, and awarded the Companion of the Order of Canada in 1968 having demonstrated, as the award sets out, the highest degree of merit to Canada and humanity.

Professor Lower died on January 7, 1988 at the age of 98.

ALUMNI NEWS BRIEFS

VOLUNTEERING

By Mike Cook (BA' 80)

It has often been said Winnipeggers generously give their time and financial support to a host of causes. To say we willingly offer our heart, hand and time is a great testament to our collective nature and community.

There is a plethora of fantastic causes to assist and become involved in. If you want to work with the young or elderly, the well-to-do or those who struggle, those far away or in our own backyard, the list is seemingly endless. For the majority of the readers, we share a wonderful common denominator: The University of Winnipeg.

Our Alma Mater owes a great deal of its success to volunteers. Those tireless men and women who freely give their time to assist the administration, the staff and the student body to become more receptive to the needs of the University and surrounding community.

The University Alumni Association Council is a gleaming example of the volunteer spirit of students of all years. The Council is made up of former students who want to enhance the reputation and ensure the University will continue to provide the highest level of education. Did you know you too could become a Council member? By so doing, you will help pursue the vision of the school and I dare say, have a lot of fun as well. No volunteer is unwanted. No time commitment is too small.

The spirit of helping others is very much alive at your University. If you wish to assist, the effort will be richly rewarded in watching current and future students take their place as vibrant members of our community and beyond. Who was it that said "no time like the present"? The answer is moot. I say to you now. Get involved with the school that shaped you into the person you are today.

STRATEGIC PLANNING SESSION

By Del Sexsmith (BA'72)

Board of Regents

The members of the Alumni Association Council gathered in a meeting room at Manitoba Hall Saturday morning September 20th to engage in a strategic planning session for the Association. Led by Gerald Munt, The University of Winnipeg's Director of Strategic and Budgetary Priorities, the session invited brainstorming built around practical ideas for a volunteer organization. A focus for the discussion was provided by the four objectives identified in the Alumni Association's constitution: to promote alumni interest and support; to promote camaraderie among alumni; to encourage alumni contributions to the University; and to foster an understanding of the role of alumni with current students. Visibility on campus, increased communications with alumni and the wider community, and the development of mentorship programs were common themes for the session.

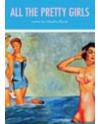

Mr. Munt's report will be reviewed by the Council this fall with a view to setting achievable goals for the Alumni Association over the next two to three years.

All the Pretty Girls

Chandra Mayor (Collegiate '90, BA '04)

Each of these stories is a glimpse into a young woman's life, spoken in her own voice. These are young women who roll pennies to buy toilet paper and roll their own cigarettes, but also watch their own children play in parks and wading pools, and watch the horizon for other women, other possibilities.

Chandra Mayor is also the author of Cherry, a novel about the Winnipeg skinhead scene in the 1990s, which won the Carol Shields Winnipeg Book Award in 2005.

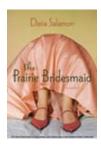

Widows of Hamilton House

the house's uncanny history and develops a fascination with the Hamilton family and the house they have both lived in.

Soon the cousins are matching wits with the Dickensian Speculators, bunking with the mysterious Red Man, and riding the rails with the inhuman Clatterfolk. In their struggle to rescue Tamlin, they must outrun, outwit or align themselves with some extraordinary characters.

Monty's careful plans are disrupted when he meets fellow thugs Samantha Richot and Hershel "Smiley" Wiebe.

Michael Van Rooy has worked as a restaurant manager, bartender, fishing guide, card dealer, news editor, freelance researcher, and cheese maker.

The Tristan Chord
